Even the saiton; but where shall I find the words? Even the saiton; but where shall I find the words? Even the saiton; but where shall I find the words of the saiton; and the saiton;

Per contra we give from The Home Journal the opinion of a lady who last year heard Sentag in London :

"The opera was Auber's last, the Prodigal Son, and I was all anxlety for Sontag's first note. She came, and mellifluous, honey-sweet indeed were the sounds I heard. The voice is exquisite, flexible, full, with heathers mellowness, but not the clarion ring of Gris's Acathors mellowness, but not the clarion ring of Grisi's superb organ, or Jenny Lind's silver vibrating tones. She is stiff, or rather indifferent, stereotyped in movement, no longer very handsome, with pleasing expression and sweet dark eyes. She has no dramatic talent, no force, nothing of Grisi's strength and majesty of action; her vocalization is exquisitely perfect as the finest musical box; but, like that, it is a machine; she touched me not; she sings with no soul. She cannot approach Jenny Lind, for she has not the genius which burns within and lights up the unrivailed Swede! There is nothing spiritual in Sontag; she is a bird, warbling and caroling deliciously, tis trac, but very near the earth; while Jenny Lind, with the earnest dedication of her marvellous gift to the highest aims of art, cardes us with her, as in her inspiration she soars toward heaven."

John McIntosh, Esq., addressed the meeting. He glanced over the history of the Temperance movement since 1842, and gave an account, also, of the proceedings and positions of those opposed to temperance men, during the past ten years. He proceeded to demenstrate the necessity for the Maine Law. Great Brisin, he said, was looking to New York for an example, and this country is annually wasting $25,000,000 in alcoholic drinks. He concluded his remarks by an earnest appeal in behalf of the Maine Law, and called upon all good citizens to sustain the movement for the adoption of that law in this State.

Joseph H. Vardewater, Esq., hoped that no wirepulling politicians would be allowed to thwart the designs of the friends of Temperance during the present campaign. He warned all good citizens not to trust the politicians, who had duped them before, and recommended to Temperance men to vote for none but Temperance men, and for the Maine Law.

As the widest publicity has been given to the charge against Mr. H., it is but just that the fact of his triumphant acquittal should be as generally made known.
